Petition Drive For Beer Sales In Pa.
ALTOONA, Pa. (AP) – The Altoona-based Sheetz convenience store chain has started a petition drive to convince Pennsylvania lawmakers that customers want to buy beer in its stores.
Thwarted in the courts, chairman Steve Sheetz wants a law allowing convenience stores to sell beer – something he's envisioned since the chain was founded more than 40 years ago.
Sheetz had a license to sell beer in one Altoona store, but the state Supreme Court nixed that in June.
Sheetz was selling the beer in a fast-food area of the store to comply with a law allowing eateries to sell beer, but ran afoul of the law by not letting customers also drink in that section of the store.
Sheetz has more than 350 stores six states, including more than 200 in Pennsylvania.

Harrisburg Protest Draws Hundreds
HARRISBURG, Pa. (AP) – Leaders of a protest that brought hundreds of people to Harrisburg over the weekend say they hope to send a message to state lawmakers about fiscal responsibility and taxes.
Participants in the event hosted by the Pennsylvania Tea Party Patriots marched through the city to the state Capitol steps Saturday chanting "Can you hear us now?" They carried signs protesting everything from abortion to gun control and waved U.S. flags as Twisted Sister's "We're Not Gonna Take It" blared from a loudspeaker.
The crowd, made up of members of several dozen regional groups from as far away as the Ohio and New Jersey borders, was estimated by Capitol police at 1,500 to 2,000 people.
"Although you hear hooting and hollering, these are not radicals," said Richard Schin, a Lower Allen Township commissioner and member of the Mechanicsburg Area chapter of conservative commentator Glenn Beck's 9/12 Project. "The silent majority is waking up."
A "petition of grievances" being circulated for submission to Gov. Ed Rendell this week condemns, among other things, tax increase proposals and the use of slots money for special development projects rather than property tax reductions. Organizer Diana Reimer said sessions will be held this week to instruct members on how to lobby elected officials.
Former U.S. House Majority Leader Dick Armey was to be the keynote speaker but was unable to attend due to weather-related travel delays.
Marlene Carrier, 74, of Millersstown, who wore a flag-decorated hat and coat, said she was surprised to feel choked-up after watching the march. She said she worries about government spending and the future of her five grandchildren.
"They might be getting something free today, but future generations will pay," she said.

Parenting Support Tip
Parenting is a 24/7 job, but you still need to find time for yourself.
Figure out ways to work some relaxation into your daily schedule – take a walk, read a book, try some yoga. Remember, if you're stressed out, your kids probably are too, so look for ways to involve the whole family in unwinding.
